PREFACE

The Australian Culture and Leisure Classifications (ACLCL) are part of the commitment of the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) to develop national standards for culture and leisure information. They comprise three separate classifications covering culture and leisure related industries, products and occupations and have been produced by the National Centre for Culture and Recreation Statistics (NCCRS), a centre within the ABS.

This is the second edition of the ACLCL, with the first edition developed in 2001. This edition reflects a minor review of the ACLCL, which was undertaken to update concordances between the ACLCL and the standard ABS classifications. The ACLCL Industry Classification has been reviewed due to the release of a new edition of the Australian and New Zealand Standard Industrial Classification (ANZSIC) in 2006. The ACLCL Product Classification has been updated to reflect the changes made to the Industry Classification. The ACLCL Occupation Classification has been reviewed following the release of the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSCO) in 2006 (which replaced the Australian Standard Classification of Occupations (ASCO)).

These Classifications are intended to form the basis for future statistical compilation in the fields of culture and leisure by the ABS and by other organisations.

The initial development and ongoing maintenance of these classifications has been made possible with the financial support of the Cultural Ministers Council Statistics Working Group and the Standing Committee on Recreation and Sport Research Group.

CHAPTER 1. AN INTRODUCTION TO THE CLASSIFICATIONS

BACKGROUND

A range of data on culture and leisure exists in Australia, sourced from surveys conducted by the Australian Bureau of Statistics (ABS) or from surveys and administrative compilations from other bodies, such as industry organisations, industry associations, educational institutions and market research companies. Information provided by data collections includes:

- people's participation in sport, cultural or leisure activities;
- people's attendance at sporting or cultural events and venues;
- the amount of time people spend on cultural and leisure activities;
- household expenditure on cultural and leisure goods and services;
- employment in organisations providing cultural and leisure opportunities to people;
- the extent to which voluntary work supports the provision of cultural and leisure opportunities to people;
- income and expenditure of organisations providing cultural and leisure goods and services to people; and
- the extent to which cultural and leisure activities are funded by governments and by businesses through donations or sponsorships.

Ideally, data from all sources would be comparable or complementary. However, this is often not the case as the underlying definitions and concepts used differ between sources. The Australian Culture and Leisure Classifications (ACLC) were developed as a means of improving coordination and comparability between data collections.

The ABS, in its role as Australia's official statistical agency, seeks to coordinate statistical activities in Australia in order to promote a more unified body of statistical information and avoid unnecessary duplication of effort. With respect to culture and leisure, this task is principally carried out by the National Centre for Culture and Recreation Statistics (NCCRS). One way of improving coordination and comparability between the various data collections is to encourage the use of a common set of classifications. The ACLC, which were first developed in 2001, were a first step towards achieving that outcome.

These classifications are intended for use in the collection and dissemination of statistics about culture and leisure-related components of Australia's economy and work force.

What is culture and leisure?

In order to collect information and present statistics on any topic, the subject area must be defined clearly. The concept of 'culture and leisure' has been the subject of considerable debate both nationally and internationally over the years. In its broadest sense, 'culture' is a term used to describe learned ways of life or a shared sense of identity or purpose. 'Leisure' denotes activities undertaken by a person for enjoyment, refreshment, relaxation or diversion. There are connections and overlaps between 'culture' and 'leisure'. In particular, many activities concerned with the expression, maintenance and preservation of culture are often associated with leisure activities. The numerous complexities inherent in these terms are described in greater detail in the ABS publication Measuring Wellbeing: Frameworks for Australian Social Statistics, 2001 (ABS 2001).

Over the years, analysts and policy makers working with this field of statistics have tended to develop practical 'activity-based' definitions of culture and leisure. The ACLC classifications are based on such an approach; that is, culture and leisure activities are considered to be those undertaken for the purpose of:

- enjoyment, relaxation, diversion or recreation;
- artistic expression (e.g. visual, musical, written, kinaesthetic or dramatic);
- using, practising or developing sporting skills;
- generating, developing, preserving or reflecting cultural or spiritual meaning; and
- facilitating any of the above.

continued

There is a close but not exact correspondence between these activities and the free time activities included in the ABS time use activity classification (ABS 2008a). In this classification, the 24 hours of a day are allocated to four different kinds of activities: necessary time (e.g. sleeping, eating, personal care), contracted time (paid work and regular education), committed time (e.g. housework, child care, shopping) and free time, which includes all other activities. Free time is discretionary time, which is free of obligation or duty, where individuals can choose the way in which their time is spent and the type of activities they will pursue. While the time use classification is not part of this suite of ACLC classifications (having as it does its own conceptual basis), it is a particularly significant one in the culture and leisure area. Therefore, differences between the scope of the ACLC and the free time component of the time use activity classification are described in the 'scope and boundary issues' section of this chapter.

The focus of the classifications

The ACLC does not cover all classifications of relevance to culture and leisure. There are a range of other classifications that are also important in this field of statistics. For example, the ABS classification of expenditure items, used in the Household Expenditure Survey and Survey of Income and Housing (ABS 2006a), includes expenditure on culture and leisure goods and services. The 2006 time use activity classification (ABS 2008a) includes time spent on culture and leisure activities (see Appendix 1). In addition, collections in the culture and leisure area have adopted various classifications and lists in the production of outputs. These include the types of sports and physical activities people participate in, selected cultural venues people visit and the type of sporting involvement (such as player or participant, coach, referee, or committee member).

People often spend money in order to undertake the cultural and leisure activities described above. In particular, they purchase goods and services—such as music CDs and sporting equipment—that enable them to procure and enjoy the benefits of cultural and leisure activity. Governments also spend money on achieving their culture and leisure objectives. For example, governments subsidise art galleries and museums to make them more widely accessible to the public. Expenditures such as these sustain the businesses of the culture and leisure sector.

The classifications of the ACLC focus on this economic side of culture and leisure activities—that is, the way culture and leisure activities are linked to the economy through direct expenditure and employment. The ACLC does this through three classifications: the Industry Classification, the Product Classification, and the Occupation Classification. The Industry Classification defines the business units which either directly produce or provide cultural and leisure goods and services for the use of the end consumer, or otherwise enable people to make use of these goods and services. The Product Classification defines cultural and leisure goods and services. The Occupation Classification lists occupations considered to be part of the culture and leisure sector. These occupations may be undertaken on a paid or unpaid basis.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE CLASSIFICATIONS

The ACLC consist of three classifications: Industry, Product and Occupation.

The ACLC Industry Classification

The ACLC Industry Classification lists industries consisting of organisations for which the main activity is the production or provision of cultural and leisure goods and services. All types of business entities are included, such as commercial and subsidised organisations, government agencies, non-profit institutions and associations and individuals undertaking business activities. The ACLC Industry Classification aligns, where possible, with the Australian and New Zealand Standard Industrial Classification (ANZSIC) 2006 (ABS and Statistics New Zealand 2006a).

continued

The ACLC Industry Classification is structured hierarchically, in a manner similar to many other classifications developed by the ABS. It has three levels of classification: divisions, groups and classes. Each class contains a definition, a list of primary activities and a list of exclusions. There are 4 divisions, 22 groups and 78 classes within the Industry Classification. See Chapter 2 for a detailed description of this classification.

The ACLC Product Classification

The ACLC Product Classification consists of a list of cultural and leisure goods and services (together known as products). These products may be the primary outputs of the industries listed in the ACLC Industry Classification or produced by other industries (for example, museum services may be provided by a business unit in the mining industry). The ACLC Product Classification fits broadly within the framework of the Australian and New Zealand Standard Product Classification (ANZSPC) (ABS and Statistics NZ 2001).

The products included in the ACLC Product Classification are grouped into 26 broad groups and 229 classes. See Chapter 3 for a detailed description of this classification.

The ACLC Occupation Classification

The ACLC Occupation Classification, which is based on the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSCO) (ABS and Statistics NZ 2006b), lists occupations which are predominantly 'culture or leisure' in nature. Those ANZSCO occupations which contain some culture or leisure specialisations but are not predominantly culture or leisure related have been excluded. For example, Sports scientists are excluded because they are included within a general ANZSCO occupation, Natural and physical science professionals n.e.c., and the majority of people whose main job was classified to that occupation were working in jobs which are not culture or leisure in nature. Thus, the ACLC Occupation Classification includes most, but not all, culture and leisure jobs. Furthermore, while it allows for classification of 'paid jobs' and 'unpaid work', the ACLC Occupation Classification is not designed to classify participation in personal hobbies or recreation activities.

The ACLC Occupation Classification contains 162 occupation classes. See Chapter 4 for a detailed description of this classification.

How do the classifications in the ACLC correspond to other ABS classifications?

The ABS presents most of its data for industries, products and occupations using standard classifications. However, each of these standard classifications is designed to cover the entire range of industries, products or occupations in existence, without gaps or overlaps. Users of information for a particular topic, such as culture and leisure, sometimes find that the level of detail provided by the standard classifications is insufficient for their purpose. For instance, ANZSIC 2006 provides one class for all performing arts businesses (namely, Class 9001 Performing arts operation); in contrast, the ACLC Industry Classification provides five classes, thus allowing for the identification of different types of performing arts.

Correspondences are essential to determine how industries (or products or occupations) coded under one classification relate to industries coded under another classification. Each of the classifications in the ACLC has been developed from the respective standard classifications, as listed below. While every effort has been made to align with the standard classifications, in the ACLC Industry Classification in particular, many classes are not comparable with the standard. If a user wishes to compare data collected under the ACLC with data produced under the standard classifications (or vice versa), it is important to study the correspondence information to determine the degree to which this may be possible.

In this second edition of the ACLC, the primary changes relate to updating correspondences between the ACLC and the new industry and occupation classifications.

continued

The standard classifications used as bases in the development of the ACLC are listed below:

ACLIC Industry Classification – Australian and New Zealand Standard Industrial Classification

ACLIC Product Classification – Australian and New Zealand Standard Product Classification

ACLIC Occupation Classification – Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations

Correspondences between the standard classifications and the ACLC are shown in this publication. The correspondences of the ACLIC Industry Classification 2008 to ANZSIC 2006, as well as ANZSIC 2006 to the ACLIC Industry Classification 2008 are included as separate tables in Chapter 2. Similarly, the correspondences of the ACLIC Product Classification 2008 to ANZSPC and ANZSPC to the ACLIC Product Classification 2008 are included as separate tables in Chapter 3. No correspondences are necessary for the ACLIC Occupation Classification because the occupation codes in the ACLC and the ANZSCO codes are the same.

Alphabetic indices

For ease of identification, an alphabetic index of the primary activities for all of the classes has been created for the ACLIC Industry Classification. For the ACLIC Product Classification and the ACLIC Occupation Classification, an alphabetic listing has been created that reflects the main product class or occupation name, respectively, together with any alternative names or titles.

The alphabetic lists are as comprehensive as possible but not all-inclusive. Appropriate classes for any classification can be located by checking the alphabetic index for the key word or a similar entry, or by examining the numeric listing.

SCOPE AND BOUNDARY ISSUES

In determining the scope of the three classifications of the ACLC or, in other words, what should be included and excluded from each classification, the following questions were considered:

- Which free time activities in the 2006 time use activity classification are not considered to be cultural and leisure activities for the purposes of the ACLC?
- Which activities outside of the 'free time' categories in the time use activity classification should be included as cultural and leisure activities for the purposes of the ACLC?
- Which industries, products and occupations are involved in providing people with the opportunities to undertake cultural and leisure activities? Which of these should be included in the ACLC and which should not?
- How far back along the chain of supply should we go in including industries, products and occupations in the ACLC?

The following paragraphs illustrate some of the issues underlying each of these questions and decisions that have been made in developing the classification.

Which 'free time' activities are excluded?

Those 'free time' activities where people undertaking the activities would not be doing so for culture or leisure purposes are excluded. For example, attendance at a range of courses conducted by organisations other than schools and universities may take place during free time. However, these courses are often aimed at purposes other than culture and leisure. Examples include driving lessons, car and home maintenance courses and vocational skills training. Thus, although teaching of arts, crafts, sports or physical recreation skills are in scope of the Product Classification and businesses mainly engaged in providing such training are in scope of the

continued

Industry Classification, the provision of other courses and businesses mainly engaged in such provision are out of scope of these classifications.

Which activities not classified as ‘free time’ activities are included?

The 2006 time use activity classification treats all eating and drinking of non-alcoholic beverages as personal care activities. However, for ACLC purposes, eating out and drinking socially outside of the home are regarded as leisure activities. Thus, the provision of opportunities to eat out and drink socially, the businesses mainly engaged in such service provision and the occupations mainly engaged in such service provision are in scope of the Product, Industry and Occupation Classifications respectively.

Paid work done by people in heritage, arts, sports or other leisure businesses or for those purposes in other businesses is classified as ‘contracted time’ in the 2006 time use activity classification, while unpaid work in those areas is classified as ‘committed time’. However, all such work is regarded as a cultural or leisure activity for the ACLC by definition.

What types of industries, products and occupations are excluded from the ACLC?

Products which may be used for culture and leisure purposes but for which the main intended use is not related to culture and leisure are excluded from the Product Classification. For example, creating graffiti art is a leisure activity and a cultural activity, and paint, particularly in spray cans, is used for this activity. However, when developing the ACLC the view was taken that graffiti art was neither the predominant nor intended use of paint in spray cans. Thus, these products are out of scope of the Product Classification and businesses mainly engaged in their manufacture are out of scope of the Industry Classification.

Similarly, hosting dinner parties in one’s own home is regarded by the ABS as a leisure activity. However, the manufacture and sale of the foods and drinks used in the preparation of a dinner party are not distinguishable from the manufacture and sale of foods and drinks used in the preparation of everyday meals in the home, which is a personal care activity. Thus, foods and drinks and their manufacture and sale are out of scope of the Product and Industry Classifications.

The same reasoning applies to occupations which have been excluded from the Occupation Classification because, although some people involved in the occupations would be working in specialisations related to culture and leisure, the majority would not be. Veterinarians and farriers are excluded in this edition of the ACLC for this reason.

Finally, there is a range of leisure activities for which there are, by their nature, no associated industries, products or occupations. Examples of such activities are visiting a friend, resting, sitting in the back yard, daydreaming, and playing ‘hide and seek’ with one’s children.

How far back along the chain of supply does the ACLC go?

In general, the good or service which directly supplies a consumer with a cultural or leisure opportunity is in scope of the Product Classification. Businesses mainly engaged in the production or provision of that good or service are in scope of the Industry Classification. However, the goods and services one step back along the chain of supply are out of scope. Two illustrations of this principle are included below.

As eating out is a leisure activity, the Product Classification includes a number of classes covering food and beverage serving services; the Industry Classification includes businesses mainly engaged in providing such services, e.g. cafes, restaurants, pubs and hospitality clubs; and the Occupation Classification includes those occupations directly involved in providing the leisure opportunity i.e. preparing and serving the food and drinks. However, the step further back in the supply chain is not covered by the ACLC. For example, glasses,

tables, chairs and tablecloths are not in scope of the Product Classification, both because they are a step back in the chain of supply and because their predominant uses are not for culture and leisure purposes.

Television sets are in scope of the Product Classification as they enable people to watch TV, which is one of the most popular leisure activities. Businesses mainly engaged in the manufacture and sale of TVs and other home entertainment equipment are in scope of the Industry Classification. However, the raw materials and components used in the manufacture of TVs are not in scope of the ACLC.

Some businesses are included in the ACLC Industry Classification because they predominantly produce goods or services only to 'support' arts and cultural activities and are only one step back in the supply chain. These are termed 'support services' and they generally supply directly to other industries in the ACLC Industry Classification. An example of this is event management companies promoting and presenting a major sporting event, such as the Olympic Games.

CHANGES IN THIS EDITION

This edition of the ACLC is the result of a minor review of the first edition. The main aim of this review was to update the concordances of the ACLC with the new edition of ANZSIC and the release of ANZSCO. In undertaking this review, a number of changes were made to the ACLC Industry Classes where it was deemed useful to improve the relevance and coherence of the ACLC. A summary of the changes is set out below and provided in more detail in appendices two and three.

ACLC Industry Classes were reviewed to improve their alignment with ANZSIC 2006 while maintaining the conceptual basis of the ACLC where possible. Since ANZSIC used supply side principles for coding activities, whilst the ACLC Industry Classification is a purpose or use-based classification, achieving a one-to-one correspondence between the two classifications was not possible. Therefore, some of the ACLC Classes only partially correspond to the ANZSIC 2006 Classes.

In addition to updating correspondences, other changes were made to the ACLC Industry Classification in light of experience with the use of the 2001 edition. The following changes have been made to address issues that arose with the previous edition. These changes included:

- The creation of three new classes (Internet broadcasting, Internet publishing and Culture services n.e.c.)
- Modification to nine class headings and three group headings (which usually imply some changes to the activities listed in the class)
- In total, 27 classes, including some that were not renamed, had changes to the inclusions or exclusions of primary activities.

The major changes are discussed below and further details of the changes are provided in appendices 2 and 3.

Internet Broadcasting and Internet Publishing

Two new Internet classes were created – 218 Internet publishing and 269 Internet broadcasting. The creation of these classes does not impact on the wider ACLC Group codes – 21 Literature and print media and 26 Broadcasting, electronic or digital media and film respectively. This change was made for several reasons. Firstly, the Internet and its use is changing rapidly and these Internet activities have evolved to the point that they are more than simply used for the dissemination of content via another media. Furthermore, users are increasingly interested in using data that separately identifies Internet activity. In addition, the change improves the concordance with ANZSIC 2006 – the two new classes together concord with ANZSIC Class 5700 Internet publishing and broadcasting.

Other culture and leisure services

A new class has been created for the Industry Classification, entitled 459 Culture services n.e.c. The previous edition of the ACLC had no satisfactory way to deal with other culture services that are not religions; club or interest groups; or support services. Examples of services included in the new class are funeral, crematorium and cemetery services; marriage celebrants; and a range of services including astrology, clairvoyance, fortune telling, genealogy, heraldry, numerology and psychic hotline services.

The related group name for the above class (Group 45) has also been changed from Community and social organisations to Other culture and leisure services to make the scope of the classification clearer. This group consists of units mainly engaged in providing support services to persons and organisations involved in culture and leisure. An example of this type of service is an event management company promoting and presenting an arts festival.

Major primary activity changes in the Industry Classification

There were 27 classes where a primary activity was added or removed. In the majority of cases these changes are minor. Details can be found in Appendix 3. There are four major changes to primary activities.

The first major change is to the Class 233 Record companies and distributors and sound recording studios. This class now includes the activities of sound recording studios, which were previously in the Class 279 Arts n.e.c. This change has also resulted in the addition of 'sound recording studios' to the class name. This change improves the coherence of the ACLC and the concordance with ANZSIC.

Textile fabric design and jewellery design have been moved from Class 241 Primary visual arts and crafts creation to 255 Other design. This change improves both the coherence of the ACLC and the concordance with ANZSIC.

Farrier and veterinary services have now been excluded as out of scope of the ACLC. This is because farriers and veterinarians care for the health of animals rather than directly supporting their involvement in leisure or sporting activities.

Marriage celebrants and funeral services have now been included in the ACLC in Class 459 Culture services n.e.c.

Changes to the Product and Occupation Classifications

Where major changes have been made to classes and primary activities in the Industry Classification, the corresponding products and occupations have also been changed. For example, the exclusion of the farrier and veterinarian industries from the Industry Classification means that farrier and veterinarian services have been excluded from the Product Classification and the occupations of farrier and veterinarian have been excluded from the Occupation Classification.

In 2006, ANZSCO was developed jointly by the ABS and Statistics New Zealand to replace the Australian Standard Classification of Occupations (ASCO) (ABS 1997) and the New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (NZSCO). The Occupation Classification in the ACLC has thus been updated to reflect the change.

HOW TO USE THE CLASSIFICATIONS

The three classifications provide common structures and definitions for culture and leisure industry, product and occupation data. As such, they are a useful guide for a wide variety of purposes relating to the analysis of cultural and leisure economic statistics. Specifically, the classifications can be used as a quick reference for practical definitions of key culture and leisure categories. They also provide information on classifications or structures used in the dissemination of the ABS's culture and leisure statistics and summarise the culture and leisure components of three of the ABS's standard classifications. Finally, researchers can use the classifications to aid their survey design and structure their research output.

The next three chapters provide the Industry Classification, Product Classification and Occupation Classification respectively. Each classification is divided into the following sections:

- An introduction – provides background on the scope, structure and concepts of the classification
- A classification summary – provides major group of class headings to aid navigation
- A detailed classification – provides a description of each class
- An alphabetic index – lists significant elements of the classification alphabetically
- Correspondences – provides correspondences with the ABS's standard classifications

The summary of the ACLC Industry Classification provides a list of all groups and classes in the classification. Summaries of the ACLC Product and Occupation Classifications contain major group headings only.

COMMENTS OR QUERIES

Comments on the classifications and queries about their use or interpretation may be addressed to The Director, National Centre for Culture and Recreation Statistics, Australian Bureau of Statistics, GPO Box 2272, Adelaide SA 5001; by email to <nccrs@abs.gov.au>; or by phone on (08) 8237 7602. Comments on potential future developments, such as the need for additional classifications, are also welcome.

CHAPTER 2. THE ACLC INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION

INTRODUCTION

The first classification within the ACLC is the Industry Classification.

CONCEPTS

The following paragraphs describe various conceptual issues relating to the ACLC Industry Classification.

An alternative view of industry

In Australia, most industry statistics are compiled and analysed based on the Australian and New Zealand Standard Industrial Classification (ANZSIC) (ABS and Statistics New Zealand 2006a). ANZSIC was developed jointly by the ABS and Statistics New Zealand in 1993 and updated in 2006. It provides the basis for the standardised collection, analysis and dissemination of economic data on an industry basis for Australia and New Zealand. ANZSIC 2006 provides a more contemporary classification system in both countries. Prior to the development of ANZSIC 1993, separate national industrial classifications were used in Australia and New Zealand. ANZSIC also endeavoured to align with The International Standard Industrial Classification of All Economic Activities (ISIC) (United Nations Statistical Office 2002) at the higher or subdivision level of the classification. Therefore, use of ANZSIC ensures comparability of industry statistics within Australia and internationally.

The conceptual framework adopted for the development of ANZSIC 2006 uses supply-side based industry definitions and groupings. Using this approach, business units engaged in similar productive activities are grouped together. However, the ACLC Industry Classification is 'activity based' or 'purpose based' and designed to serve the needs of a particular segment of the population. It groups businesses whose main activities are to produce goods or provide services which are intended for use by people participating in cultural or leisure activities. It also groups businesses that provide support services to those businesses. Therefore, it provides more detailed industry classes and/or different groupings of activities than ANZSIC 2006.

Care must be taken when comparing data grouped according to the ACLC Industry Classification (such as employment or turnover for culture and leisure businesses) with data for other industry groups as defined by another classification because of potential overlap between the groups being compared. Comparisons between industry groups are only valid when using data based solely on ANZSIC (or other classifications which are designed to cover the whole economy without duplication) and where the addition of data from all industry divisions or classes always represents the whole economy.

Business unit

The terms 'unit' and 'business unit' are used interchangeably throughout the Industry Classification. These terms refer to the business or government organisation, community organisation or other entity being classified or surveyed. In general, a business unit is an accounting unit for which a full set of accounts are maintained, allowing employment, profit and loss, and balance sheet data to be collected. Such a business unit may operate from one or more locations. As a result, units which are part of a larger organisation and have only an informal budget are not defined as separate business units. For example, a corporate museum (operated within another business) which does not keep a separate set of accounts would not qualify as a business unit. However, data on such secondary activities may still be collected. More information on this can be found in the introduction to Chapter 3 on the Product Classification.

While the ACLC Industry Classification is designed to classify accounting units, it may also be used to classify other statistical units as long as comparison is undertaken with caution. For example, in a household survey, people may be asked to describe the activities undertaken at their place of work and this information may be used to classify the respondent's industry of employment. However, the place of work may be a component of a larger business and may not have its own set of accounts. Thus, compared with the location at which the respondent works, the larger business may be classified to a different industry. As a consequence, measures of industry employment derived from such a survey are not strictly comparable with those derived from a survey of business (or accounting) units.

Any class may contain business units which are a mix of private, government and community organisations as well as individuals undertaking business activities.

Classification by predominant activity

All business units can be either classified to a class within the ACLC Industry Classification or considered to be out of scope of the Classification. The process of allocating a business unit to an industry class involves a decision about the main activity or objective of the unit. That is, business units involved in activities belonging to more than one class are coded to the class covering their main activity. Generally this involves determining which activity accounts for the majority of the unit's revenue or expense and is hence the predominant activity. However, there are exceptions to this method of determining predominance that are explained within the definitions of the individual classes. For example, it is recognised that the major source of revenue for newspaper publishers and for radio and television services is usually advertising. Yet, it is clear that the main objective of a radio station, for example, is to operate a radio service and it would be classified accordingly.

There are business units which carry out cultural and leisure activities but the cultural or leisure activities may form only a small part of their overall activities. Such businesses are out of scope of the ACLC Industry Classification. For instance, a business may have an in-house library. However, if the main activity of the business is not related to culture or leisure, the business would be out of scope of the ACLC Industry Classification. Similarly, many government units undertake in-scope activities, but if their main activity is not related to culture or leisure, the units are out of scope. In addition, a business may only be classified to one industry class. For example, a business that engages in both book publishing and literature retailing will only be classified to the Industry Class representing its predominant activity.

It is important to acknowledge that any culture and leisure activity of interest may take place in industries both within and outside of the scope of the ACLC Industry Classification and within and outside the scope of the individual industry class which appears most relevant to that activity. Thus, the ACLC Product Classification (see Chapter 3) is designed to list and group cultural and leisure goods and services which may be produced or provided by any business unit in the Australian economy. Using the last example above, regardless of the industry to which the business is classified, it may be asked for data on the books it sells as distinct from the books it publishes. The extent to which data may be obtained for these products will depend on the level of detail in business records. More information on the use of the Product Classification may be found in the introduction to Chapter 3.

Limitations of the ACLC Industry Classification

The ACLC Industry Classification includes and groups businesses based on the intended purpose of the goods and services they are mainly engaged in producing. In contrast, to a large extent, ANZSIC groups together units which engage in the same or similar production or service delivery processes and generally use similar technology. Further discussion on the 'intended purpose' concept is included in Chapter 3.

This difference in approach between the two industry classifications is particularly evident in the manufacturing classes and affects some other classes to a similar or lesser extent. In the ACLC Industry Classification, businesses whose main activity is the production of goods for which the intended purpose is cultural or leisure pursuits are grouped according to purpose, e.g. sports and physical recreation. In contrast, in ANZSIC manufacturing businesses are generally grouped according to the inputs and processes used (e.g. wood product manufacturing, metal product manufacturing, etc.). For example, the businesses classified to the ACLC Industry Class 341 Sports and physical recreation goods manufacturing are mainly engaged in producing a range of goods intended for use in sports and physical recreation, such as sports clothes, sports shoes, weightlifting equipment and synthetic sports surfaces. The businesses classified to the ACLC Industry Class 481 Other culture and leisure goods manufacturing n.e.c. are mainly engaged in producing products used by children and adults for a range of leisure activities, such as watching TV, playing in a playground, playing board games, playing arcade games, gambling on poker machines, taking photos on family outings and listening to recorded music. Because of the different conceptual basis of ANZSIC, many of these businesses are classified to a range of disparate ANZSIC classes and are grouped with businesses such as manufacturing metal, chemical, paper and electronic products which are not used for leisure purposes.

It follows that it would not be possible to obtain data for these classes through any standard ABS industry survey. It may be possible to produce estimates of components of these classes via surveys collecting product and industry data, but any attempt to produce aggregate data for these classes should be approached with extreme caution.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE ACLC INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION

Structure and numbering

The ACLC Industry Classification has a hierarchical structure comprising categories at three levels: divisions (the broadest level), groups and classes (the finest level). Divisions and groups are defined by the aggregation of the definitions of their component classes.

At the division level, the main purpose is to broadly identify the main culture and leisure segments. There are four divisions in the ACLC Industry Classification. These are identified by a number as follows:

- 1 Heritage
- 2 Arts
- 3 Sports and physical recreation
- 4 Other culture and leisure

A number of organisations provide services to both the culture and the sport and physical recreation sectors. For instance, management services for professional sportspeople may be provided by the same businesses that provide these services to performing artists. Also, booking agencies generally provide a service for both sectors. Some of the classes in Division 4 are designed to cater for these overlaps.

The group and class levels provide increasingly detailed dissections of the broad categories. Each group is represented by a 2-digit code and each class by a 3-digit code. In total there are 4 divisions, 22 groups and 78 classes within the ACLC Industry Classification.

Consistent with other ABS classification numbering conventions, a '9' appearing as the third digit in a class number usually designates a 'miscellaneous' class, and is labelled 'other' or 'n.e.c.' (meaning 'not elsewhere classified'). These miscellaneous classes usually constitute diverse primary activities which are not sufficiently 'significant' to justify separate classes.

Each division and group description contains a definition. Each class description includes a definition of the units which would be classified to that class; a set of notes explaining exclusions from the class and references to more appropriate classes for those exclusions; and a list of primary activities associated with the class.

Alphabetic list of primary activities

Immediately following the detailed ACLC Industry Classification is an alphabetic listing of the names of primary activities within its scope. The class to which a primary activity belongs can be determined by referring to this list.

Correspondence to ANZSIC

The Industry Classification of the ACLC was developed as an alternative view to ANZSIC and tables are included to illustrate how the ACLC Industry Classification classes correspond to ANZSIC classes and vice versa. Where the correspondence is partial, this is indicated in the table by 'p'. Minor correspondences are not shown. Where no major correspondence exists, this is indicated by an asterisk (*).

CHAPTER 2. THE ACLC INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION DETAILED INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION

DIVISION 1 – HERITAGE

DEFINITION

Division 1 Heritage consists of units mainly engaged in the management of sites and collections which represent the natural or cultural environment of Australia and the rest of the world. The sites and collections have historic, aesthetic, scientific, environmental or social significance. 'Significance' may be of relevance on an international, national or sub-national basis (i.e. state/territory, or a local region or community). Division 1 also includes the selling and restoration of antiques and collectables.

1 HERITAGE

GROUP 11 – MUSEUMS, ANTIQUES AND COLLECTABLES

1 HERITAGE

- 11 Museums, antiques and collectables
 - 111 Art museums
 - 112 Other museums
 - 113 Antiques and collectables dealing and restoration

GROUP DEFINITION

Group 11 Museums, antiques and collectables consists of units mainly engaged in the management of collections of heritage objects and artefacts, and the selling and restoration of antiques and collectables.

111 ART MUSEUMS

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in the acquisition, collection management, conservation, interpretation, communication and exhibition of visual arts and crafts on the basis of their aesthetic and historic value. Visual arts and crafts include paintings, murals, drawings, cartoons, prints, photographic works of art, digital works of art, art installations, sculpture, ceramics, pottery, jewellery, woven or printed textile art, clothing and wearables, carvings, furniture, glass craft, metal craft and leather craft.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating museums other than art museums are included in Class 112 Other museums;
- (b) retailing antique art are included in Class 113 Antiques and collectables dealing and restoration;
- (c) retailing contemporary art are included in Class 243 Visual arts and crafts retailing; and
- (d) operating art spaces which provide an exhibition space for developing artists are included in Class 279 Arts n.e.c.

Primary Activities

Art museum operation

Indigenous art gallery operation

National and state/territory art gallery operation

Public art gallery operation

Public art museum operation

Regional or local art gallery operation

112 OTHER MUSEUMS

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in the acquisition, collection management, conservation, interpretation, communication and exhibition of heritage objects and artefacts.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating public art galleries and art museums are included in Class 111 Art museums;
- (b) operating herbaria are included in Class 123 Botanic gardens;
- (c) operating heritage theme parks, which do not have either original buildings or a collection of original artefacts, are included in Class 421 Amusement and theme parks; and
- (d) operating historical societies or National Trust organisations which do not manage a museum; maintain a collection of original artefacts; or operate a historic place, site or house; are included in Class 451 Interest clubs and groups.

Primary Activities

Heritage theme park operation where the park consists of original buildings or a collection of original artefacts is maintained

Historic place, site or house operation

Historic railway or tramway operation where original rolling stock or similar is used or a collection of original artefacts is maintained

Historical society operation where a collection of original artefacts is maintained

Indigenous keeping place operation

Local or regional museum operation

Museum operation other than art museum

National and state/territory museum operation

National Trust operation where museums are managed or a collection of original artefacts is maintained

Science centre operation

Theme park operation which has a heritage theme and consists of original buildings or maintains a collection of original artefacts

War memorial operation where a collection of original artefacts is maintained

Working transport museum operation where original rolling stock or similar is used or a collection of original artefacts is maintained

113 ANTIQUES AND COLLECTABLES DEALING AND RESTORATION

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in the sale or resale (including by auction) or restoration of antique objects and collectables.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) retailing second hand books are included in Class 217 Literature retailing;
- (b) retailing second hand recorded music are included in Class 234 Recorded audio and video media retailing;
- (c) retailing contemporary arts and crafts are included in Class 243 Visual arts and crafts retailing;
- (d) providing art auction services for contemporary art are included in Class 243 Visual arts and crafts retailing;
- (e) providing picture framing services are included in Class 279 Arts n.e.c.;
- (f) providing services which repair, restore and tune contemporary musical instruments are included in Class 279 Arts n.e.c.;
- (g) providing pawnbroking services are out of scope of the classification; and
- (h) retailing general second hand goods, other than antiques, collectables, books or recorded music, are out of scope of the classification.

Primary Activities

Antique art retailing
Antique book retailing
Antique musical instrument retailing
Antique shop or antique centre operation
Antique wholesaling
Appraisal or valuation of antiques
Auction service predominantly dealing in antiques
Collectables retailing
On-line auction service predominantly dealing in antiques
Restoration of antiques and collectables

GROUP 12 – ENVIRONMENTAL HERITAGE

1 HERITAGE

- 12 Environmental heritage
 - 121 Nature parks and reserves
 - 122 Zoological parks and aquaria
 - 123 Botanic gardens

GROUP DEFINITION

Group 12 Environmental heritage consists of units mainly engaged in the management of sites, areas and collections such as national parks, fauna and flora reserves, zoological parks, aquaria and botanic gardens.

121 NATURE PARKS AND RESERVES

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in the management of Australian native areas such as national parks and fauna and flora reserves. Management consists of protecting the animals and plants in their natural environment, but not actively managing them as in a zoological park or botanic garden.

'Not actively managing' in this context means that the animals are in an environment natural to their species. They may be fenced in for protection from predators but are not themselves in captivity and are not given supplementary feeding.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating zoological gardens and parks, and aquaria are included in Class 122 Zoological parks and aquaria;
- (b) operating wildlife sanctuaries and marine parks where the animals are actively managed are included in Class 122 Zoological parks and aquaria;
- (c) operating botanic gardens are included in Class 123 Botanic gardens; and
- (d) operating recreation and sporting grounds are included in Class 322 Other sports and physical recreation venues, grounds and facilities.

Primary Activities

Fauna reserve operation

Flora reserve operation, where the primary intention is to preserve native species

National or state/territory park or reserve operation

Tourist cave operation

Wildlife sanctuary or marine park operation where the animals are protected but not actively managed

CHAPTER 2. THE ACLC INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION DETAILED INDUSTRY CLASSIFICATION continued

122 ZOOLOGICAL PARKS AND AQUARIA

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in the breeding, preservation, study and display of native and/or exotic fauna in captivity. Units such as aquaria may include an entertainment or performance element.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating wildlife sanctuaries and marine parks where the animals are protected but not actively managed are included in Class 121 Nature parks and reserves; and
- (b) commercial farming operations where fauna can be viewed as a subsidiary activity are out of scope of the classification.

Primary Activities

Animal/fauna park operation

Aquarium operation

Aviary operation

Butterfly house operation

Free range or open range zoo operation

Reptile park operation

Wildlife park operation where the animals are actively managed

Zoological park or zoological garden operation

123 BOTANIC GARDENS

Definition

This class consists of units mainly engaged in collecting, studying, exchanging and displaying native and/or exotic plants.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating flora reserves primarily intended to preserve native species in national parks or reserves are included in Class 121 Nature parks and reserves; and
- (b) propagating native and/or exotic flora for commercial purposes are out of scope of the classification.

Primary Activities

Arboretum operation

Botanic garden operation

Herbarium operation

GROUP 13 – LIBRARIES AND ARCHIVES

1 HERITAGE

13 Libraries and archives

131 Libraries

132 Archives

GROUP DEFINITION

Group 13 Libraries and Archives consists of units mainly engaged in maintaining collections of information. Collections may consist of books, journals, newspapers, music, documents, etc. which may be stored and accessed in hard copy or by electronic means. Libraries and archives facilitate the use of such collections as are required to meet the information, research, education or recreation needs of their users. These units may also acquire, research, store, preserve and generally make accessible to the public historical documents, photographs, maps, audio material, audiovisual material and other archival material of historical interest.

131 LIBRARIES

Definition

This class consists of units whose main activity is the acquisition, collection, conservation and loan of materials such as books, magazines, manuscripts, musical scores, recordings, maps or prints. Libraries also perform an information service role. Information and materials may be stored and accessed electronically or otherwise.

Exclusions / References

Units mainly engaged in

- (a) operating archive services are included in Class 132 Archives;
- (b) commercial film and video library services are included in Class 264 Film and video distribution;
- (c) hiring prerecorded video media to the general public are included in Class 266 Video and other electronic media hire services; and
- (d) operating still film and photographic libraries where the predominant activity is the sales of rights to photographs, etc. are included in Class 279 Arts n.e.c.

Primary Activities

Lending library service

Library service

National and state/territory library service

132 ARCHIVES

Definition

This class consists of units whose primary function is the permanent (or long term) preservation of unique records, selected because of their administrative, financial, legal, evidential or other information value, which are generally no longer required for the conduct of current activities by government agencies, non-government organisations or private individuals. Archives provide services which include the description and preservation of

CHAPTER 3. THE ACLC PRODUCT CLASSIFICATION

INTRODUCTION

The second classification within the ACLC is the Product Classification.

The Product Classification of the ACLC is designed to list all goods and services (together known as products) which are considered to be culture or leisure in nature. The ACLC Product Classification aligns broadly with the Australian and New Zealand Standard Product Classification (ANZSPC) (ABS and Statistics NZ 2001) which resulted from a joint project of the ABS and Statistics New Zealand. The ANZSPC is based on the Central Product Classification (CPC) Version 1.0, 1998 Edition (United Nations Statistical Office 1998), which is the standard international classification of all goods and services.

SCOPE

The ACLC Product Classification lists and groups products which are intended to be used for culture or leisure purposes. In some cases, the product may ultimately be used by the end consumer for purposes unrelated to culture and leisure. However, it would not be expected that producers or providers of a product would know how the end consumer will use the product. Thus, information about all such products would be collected from the producer or provider without any expectation that a distinction can be made between intended and actual uses of the products. For example, sports shoes have design features which indicate that they are intended for use during sports participation and so are included in the Product Classification of the ACLC. However, manufacturers, wholesalers and retailers of sports shoes would not know which of the sports shoes they produce or sell are ultimately used for their intended purpose. Thus, all sports shoes are included in Class 1614 Sports or physical recreation footwear, regardless of their actual use.

A business is classified to a class in the Industry Classification of the ACLC only if its predominant activity matches the definition of that class. However, culture and leisure products may be produced by any business in or out of scope of the Industry Classification. For instance, library services may be provided by a business unit in the mining industry which would not be in scope of the Industry Classification of the ACLC. However, the product 'library services' provided by any business unit, is in scope of the Product Classification of the ACLC (Class 0112 Library services). Similarly, caravans are in scope of the Product Classification of the ACLC, regardless of whether they are made by a business mainly engaged in caravan manufacturing (which is in scope of the Industry Classification of the ACLC) or by a business mainly engaged in truck manufacturing (which is out of scope of the Industry Classification).

Data about the manufacture or sale of goods have been collected by the ABS in surveys such as manufacturing (ABS 1999) and retail (ABS 2007a) commodity collections. Where there is sufficient interest in culture and leisure services provided by businesses which are in or out of scope of the Industry Classification of the ACLC, a survey covering all businesses providing such services may be undertaken. For example, in 2003–04, the ABS conducted a survey of organisations engaged in operating museums and art galleries (ABS 2005). This survey collected information about museum services provided by organisations in ANZSIC Class 9220 Museums, as well as other museums/galleries registered as having a collection with Australian Museums and Galleries OnLine (AMOL) which were not mainly engaged in the provision of museum services and were, therefore, not classified to ANZSIC Class 9220. Surveyed organisations included government departments, educational institutions and local historical societies. In such surveys, the availability of financial data (e.g. income and expenditure) specifically related to the service of interest may be limited. However, it may be possible for the organisation to provide an estimate of employment along with other information of relevance specifically related to the service. For example, the ABS Museums Survey collected information about admissions, the number of special exhibitions held and the number of museum objects held by the museum.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE PRODUCT CLASSIFICATION

Structure and numbering

The products in this classification are grouped into 26 groups and 229 classes. Each group has a 2-digit code within the range of 01 to 26. The classes each have a 4-digit code, with the first two digits being the code of the group to which the class belongs. For example, Class 1602 Sleeping bags belongs to Group 16 Sports and camping equipment.

Alphabetic list of products

Immediately following the detailed Product Classification is an alphabetic listing of the names of products within its scope. The class to which a product belongs can be determined by referring to the alphabetic list.

Correspondence to the ANZSPC

Correspondence tables are included to illustrate how the ACLC Product Classification classes correspond to the ANZSPC classes and vice versa. Where correspondence is partial, this is indicated in the table by 'p'. Where no correspondence exists, this is indicated by an asterisk (*).

CHAPTER 4. THE ACLC OCCUPATION CLASSIFICATION

INTRODUCTION

The third classification within the ACLC is the Occupation Classification.

This classification presents a method of classifying data for cultural and leisure occupations. The Occupation Classification is drawn directly from the Australian and New Zealand Standard Classification of Occupations (ANZSCO), First Edition (ABS and Statistics NZ 2006b). The codes used in the Occupation Classification are the codes used in ANZSCO to represent particular occupations.

SCOPE

The Occupation Classification of the ACLC categorises occupations which are predominantly 'culture or leisure' in nature. Occupations were selected because they are intrinsically 'creative' (e.g. 211413 Sculptor); represent a sport-playing activity (e.g. 452412 Golfer) or have a role in enabling others to play sport (e.g. 139915 Sportsadministrator); undertake physical recreation (e.g. 452215 Outdooradventure instructor); or participate in a cultural or leisure activity (e.g. 224611 Librarian). An occupation is also included if it is predominantly found in culture or leisure businesses, hence, the inclusion of occupations 392311 Printing machinist and 899921 Ticket collector/usher.

The classification is intended to be used to categorise work which may be paid or unpaid (e.g. Library assistant and Gallery or museum attendant), but not participation which is in the form of a personal hobby or recreation activity. For example, while the ACLC Occupation Classification could be used to classify the occupation of professional tennis players (as this is their work), it is not intended to classify the activity of social tennis players as their participation is in the form of recreation rather than work.

For a relatively small number of ANZSCO occupations, a variety of different specialisations are covered by one occupation. This occurs most frequently when the numbers of people working in these specialisations are too small to be usefully identified separately in any ABS published output. It should be noted that some specialised cultural and leisure occupations are not separately identified by this classification and instead may be included in a broader occupation category. For example, the occupation of Illustrator includes the specialisations of Animator and Cartoonist).

There are instances where some specialisations included within particular ANZSCO occupations are culture or leisure in nature, while some specialisations are not. Analysis was undertaken in the initial development of the ACLC to ensure that only those occupations were included where culture or leisure specialisations were predominant. This led to some occupations being excluded because the culture and leisure specialisations were a relatively minor component of that occupation. For instance, the occupation 139999 Specialist managers n.e.c. is excluded from the ACLC Occupation Classification even though it includes relevant specialisations (e.g. Bishop) because most of the people whose main job was classified to that occupation were working in jobs which were not related to the culture or leisure sectors (e.g. Airport manager, Ambassador and Harbour master).

Similarly, some occupations have been included in the classification because the majority of people whose main job was classified to those occupations were in specialisations which are related to culture or leisure. For example, ANZSCO occupation 899711 Vending machine attendant is included in the ACLC Occupation Classification because the majority of the people whose main job was classified to that occupation were working in jobs related to culture and leisure.

Finally, note that no occupations other than ANZSCO occupations have been included in the ACLC Occupation Classification. However, for some occupations which are included in the ACLC Occupation Classification, culture and leisure specialisations which are not listed in ANZSCO (but which would be classified to that occupation) have been added. For instance, the specialisation Clapper loader (film) is not listed in ANZSCO, but has been added as a specialisation under the occupation of 399599 Performing arts technicians n.e.c. Another example is Committee member (sport) which has been added as a specialisation of 452323 Other sports official. These additions allow a better understanding of the types of work included within the occupations and in some cases aimed at assisting with the classification of unpaid work.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE OCCUPATION CLASSIFICATION

Structure and numbering

The main features of the Occupation Classification in the ACLC are similar to ANZSCO. The structure of ANZSCO comprises five hierarchical levels, ranging from major group to occupation. Note that in the Occupation Classification, for brevity, only the major group and the occupation are named. The names of the intermediate levels can be found within the ANZSCO publication itself (ABS and Statistics NZ 2006b).

ANZSCO distinguishes the major groups (e.g., Manager, Professionals) from each other using a combination of skill level and skill specialisation. Skill level is a function of the range and complexity of the set of tasks involved in an occupation. It is measured by the level or amount of formal education and training, the amount of previous experience in a related job and the amount of on-the-job training required to competently perform the set of tasks required for that occupation. Skill specialisation is a function of the field of knowledge required, the tools and equipment used, the materials worked on, and the goods or services produced or provided. The ANZSCO classification contains eight major groups which are denoted by a 1-digit code. These groups are set out in the Occupation Classification Summary.

The most detailed level of the ANZSCO classification is the occupation. An occupation is distinguished from other occupations in the same major group on the basis of detailed skill specialisation. ANZSCO includes 998 occupations which are denoted by 6-digit codes. Each of these occupations has a principal title and may also have alternative titles and/or specialisation titles. The principal title is the title that best describes the particular occupation. It is generally the most commonly used title. An alternative title has the same meaning as the principal title but may be less commonly used. A specialisation title is a commonly occurring title which refers to a subset of jobs belonging to the occupation designated by the principal title. These jobs involve the performance of specialised tasks rather than the broader range of tasks usually performed in the occupation.

The detailed Occupation Classification of the ACLC is presented in two formats – ANZSCO order and the culture and leisure alternative view of ANZSCO (ACLC grouped order). ANZSCO order lists occupations that are culture and leisure in nature in the same structure and order presented in ANZSCO. The culture and leisure alternative view of ANZSCO groups the occupations by the divisions in the ACLC Industry Classification – namely, Heritage collection; Arts; Sports and physical recreation; and Other leisure.

In the ANZSCO order of the detailed Occupation Classification, the first column shows the ANZSCO Major Group, for example, 1 Managers. The second column shows the 6-digit ANZSCO Code, for example, '121316'. The final column lists the occupation names: first the principal title, for example, 'Horse breeder'; then possible alternative titles, for example, 'Horse stud manager'; then finally any specialisation titles, for example, 'Stud master/mistress'.

The culture and leisure alternative view of ANZSCO only lists the occupations, it does not list alternative titles or specialisations. The occupations are grouped by the 4 divisions discussed previously and these divisions are further divided into specialist sub-divisions. The occupations are then listed in alphabetical order.

The Occupation Classification of the ACLC does not provide a description of the nature of the activity undertaken in the occupation or the types of tasks performed in it. Instead, activity and task descriptions can be found in the ANZSCO publication (ABS and Statistics NZ 2006b).

There are 162 occupations listed in the Occupation Classification of the ACLC.

Alphabetic list of occupations

To enable readers to readily identify which occupation a cultural or leisure job belongs to, the occupation titles, together with alternative descriptions and specialisations, are listed alphabetically in a separate table.

Correspondences with the ANZSCO

The ACLC occupations are directly extracted from the ANZSCO and bear the same codes. Thus no separate correspondence is necessary.

GLOSSARY

Amusement arcade	A venue (often indoors) which typically offers a range of games, often coin or token operated, such as pinball machines.
Amusement park	A centre (often outdoors) which typically offers rides, games and shows for entertainment. See also Theme park.
Antique	An object of art or a furniture piece of a former period. This definition adopts the Australian rule that an object would generally be aged 50 years or more to qualify as an antique. Antique retailers also commonly deal in collectables. See also Collectables.
Art gallery	The Classifications distinguish between three types of organisations that are often called art galleries: a) commercial art galleries: these organisations display and sell artworks either on consignment or by outright sale (and are sometimes called 'dealer galleries'); b) art museums: these organisations manage art collections and display artworks but the primary activity is not the sale of artworks; and c) art spaces: these organisations provide an exhibition space (and sometimes a work space) for artists but do not sell artworks. See also Art spaces.
Art space	An art space provides an exhibition space (and sometimes a work space) for artists but does not sell artwork. The art space may be funded by government grants, through sponsorship or by groups of artists. The use of the art space is generally provided free of charge to the artist.
Book	For the purposes of the ACLC, a book is defined as textual, graphical or pictorial material intended to be either printed on paper and bound, or otherwise published. Audio or electronic publishing (e.g. multimedia, interactive) are included. A book must be allocated an International Standard Book Number (ISBN) and offered for sale.
Broadcasting	The transmission of radio, television or similar programs which can be received by a wide audience with suitable equipment. Broadcasting is also a general term for the process of transmission of all radio and television programs. See also Narrowcasting.
Collectables	According to The Macquarie Dictionary, collectables may be: a) objects of no intrinsic value, such as matchboxes or beer cans, collected as a hobby or memento; or b) objects of great antiquarian value, such as rare coins, often collected as an investment. This definition describes the two extremes of a range of objects which may be regarded as collectables. Many collectables, such as stamps, porcelain figures, plates and dolls, may have significant monetary value although they are not antiques.
Commercial photography service	A commercial photography service usually includes fashion, studio, advertising, scientific and/or industrial photography.
Concession business	A concession business is one which is granted rights by a controlling authority to operate its business within the authority's jurisdiction. Example: A sideshow may operate as a concession within a larger 'show' or event and pay a rent in the form of a fixed fee or percentage of returns.
Copyright	The exclusive right, granted by law for a certain term, to make and dispose of copies of, or otherwise to control, a literary, musical, dramatic or artistic work. See also Royalties.
Dance music creator	Dance music creators re-mix music from other sources. Their creativity is acknowledged by their eligibility for copyright receipts.
Datacasting	According to the Television Broadcasting Services (Digital Conversion) Act 1998 (Cwlth), datacasting is a service (other than a broadcasting service) that delivers information (whether in the form of data, text, speeches, images or in any other form) to persons having equipment appropriate for receiving that information, where the delivery of the service uses the broadcasting services band.

Distribution	Distribution may have a variety of meanings depending upon the forum in which it is used. Within the Industry Classification, distribution generally refers to the process of wholesaling and delivering of goods to be sold to the retailer. Example: Film distributors usually sell and deliver the film to the theatre.
Distribution - music	Music distributors generate income mainly from wholesaling recorded music products. These may be sourced through either licensing or packaging and distribution deals, or may simply be purchased outright for resale.
Domestic photography service	A domestic photography service usually includes portrait and wedding photography.
Event presenter, event promoter	Event presenters and promoters plan and design an event by: negotiating with the participating company, artist, sporting team or individual; organising venues; hiring additional staff for the duration of the event; and undertaking administrative arrangements. A presenter or promoter deals with an already established 'product'. Some business units undertake both event presentation or promotion, and event production (see Event producer).
Event producer	Event producers contribute artistically to the primary creation of the show or event, often creating a business entity for the duration of the event by employing all personnel required, including performers. Some business units undertake both event presentation or promotion (see Event presenter, event promoter), and event production.
Fringe theatre	Refers to theatre companies or genres which 'push the boundaries' by performing unusual or experimental theatre. Also known as innovative theatre.
Games	The term 'games' is mainly used in reference to board, card and strategy games where the activities will mainly involve mental dexterity, although limited physical activity or hand/eye coordination may also be involved. If significant physical activity or hand/eye coordination is involved then the activity is classified as a sport or physical recreation. These games may be played on the Internet or by other electronic means as well as by traditional methods.
Harness racing	Describes the racing of horses in harness pulling a two-wheeled 'gig' or 'sulky'. The horse must be registered as a 'Standardbred'.
Hospitality clubs	Hospitality clubs are mainly engaged in providing gambling, sporting, meals and other entertainment services to members.
Innovative theatre	See Fringe theatre.
Installation art	An increasingly common form of artistic expression that is difficult to categorise. In essence, installation art is an extended form of sculpture. It may, however, use a variety of media, consist of a number of parts and require varying levels of interaction. Spatial considerations are also important, with installations often borrowing from and relating to the space in which they are exhibited.
Internet radio and/or television	Internet or Web radio and television stations transmit programmes which are only accessed by audiences via the Internet. Also known as web radio and/or television.
Manufacturing	Relates to the physical or chemical transformation of materials or components into new products.
Multipath films	Multipath or interactive films are usually accessed via a personal computer and allow the audience to choose from a number of options in the story line.
Narrowcasting	Transmission of radio, television or similar programmes which can be received only by a specific, 'narrow' audience. See also Broadcasting.

Examples of narrowcasting are pay television where there is a charge for service, and community television or radio stations where the signal reaches a specific area only.

On-line	To be on-line means to be connected to the Internet or 'world wide web' via a computer.
Originating a music recording	A record company originates a recording by arranging for the recording artist(s) to have access to a recording studio to record their work.
Park, reservation or reserve	The terms 'park', 'reservation' and 'reserve' may be used interchangeably and may describe an area set aside for recreation or for the protection of native flora or fauna. In addition, the terms may be used as part of a special description, for example 'zoological park'. Examples: A 'national park' is an area where flora and fauna are protected and the public are allowed access, and is usually managed by a government entity and listed on a Heritage register. A 'flora reserve' is an area where plants are protected and allowed to grow in their natural environment.
Pay television	Television services for which a viewing charge is levied. See also Narrowcasting.
Printing	The transference of prepared textual, graphic and pictorial material to paper (usually) so as to create multiple copies of the prepared material.
Publishing - audio recordings	In releasing a recording for sale to the general public, a record company is in effect publishing that recording. In order to do this, the record company will have entered into a contractual arrangement with a recording artist and will have arranged for the manufacture, marketing and distribution of the finished product. The record company may also have arranged the recording sessions and/or sourced the material to be recorded.
Publishing - literature	The publishing of literature (e.g. books, periodicals, newspapers) involves the preparation of textual, graphical and pictorial material intended to be either printed and bound, or otherwise published (e.g. in electronic format). Publishing activities include: commissioning or accepting material from authors or other originators; reading and editing submitted or resubmitted material; design and preparation of layout; and arranging for the printing, marketing and distribution of the finished product.
Publishing - music	A music publisher is assigned the rights to (or owns outright) the copyright in musical works created by composers/songwriters with whom it has music publishing contracts. It is the function of the music publisher to promote and authorise the use of these musical works in order to make money for both parties. This may involve the works being used in recordings, radio, television, motion pictures, advertising, live performances, print and other media. The music publisher receives all royalties generated, retains a percentage and passes the greater portion on to the composer/songwriter.
Publishing - sheet music	The publication of sheet music is a similar process to the publication of literature. A music publisher makes copies of the sheet music available for sale or distribution to the public. These will usually be in a printed form but can also be in an electronic format.
Puppet theatre and puppet shows	Puppet theatre companies are normally employing units and are classified to Class 222 Drama in the Industry Classification. Puppet shows tend to be smaller operations, often freelance units, and are classified to Class 225 Other Performing Arts in the Industry Classification.
Releasing a music recording	See Publishing - audio recording.
Retailing	The term retailing is usually defined as the sale or resale of new or used goods to the consumer for personal or household consumption. Retailing covers: <ul style="list-style-type: none">■ department stores and other shops;■ motor vehicle retailers and service outlets;■ stalls (e.g. in markets);■ mail order services;■ door to door sellers;

Retailing continued	<ul style="list-style-type: none">■ home delivery services (e.g. milk vendors);■ vending machines;■ consumer cooperatives;■ selected repair activities such as repairs of household equipment or motor vehicles; and■ selling on commission.
Royalties	An agreed portion of the revenue received from the sale or use of a creative work paid to its creator. See also Copyright.
Sales and/or selling	The terms 'sales' or 'selling' are used in the Industry Classification to refer to wholesaling, retailing, hiring and leasing of goods or services.
Specialisations	Specialisations are listed for many of the occupations in the Occupation Classification. These refer to a subset of jobs belonging to each occupation, which involve the performance of specialised tasks rather than the broader range of tasks usually performed in the occupation. Example: 'Reference librarian' is a specialisation of the occupation 'Librarian'.
Stock footage	Exposed film of scenes or past events that can be duplicated and incorporated into a new production. Examples of organisations that have stock footage libraries are Film World, the ABC and Film Australia.
